FrOX 0.0.2: fsx -realistic flight simulation -plane simulation -add more features Increasing the Efficiency of the Recycling of the Electrospun Mats Using PVA/Urea as a Coating. The aim of this study was to analyze the effect of an acetylation treatment of polyvinyl alcohol (PVA) solutions on the electrospun mats properties. The acetylated PVA was dissolved in N-methyl-2-pyrrolidone (NMP) and electrospun on stainless steel. The acetylation process led to improvements in the thermal stability of PVA, since the treated PVA showed two melting points, one at 66.2°C and the other at 185.7°C. The scanning electron microscope (SEM) images showed that the morphology of the fibers were not affected by the acetylation process. The thermal stability of the acetylated PVA improved the wettability of PVA solutions, which was demonstrated by the faster evaporation of the solutions. This led to higher polymer retention in the fibrous mats and could be exploited to enhance the adhesion of the fibrous mats to the implant surface, either through a physical or chemical approach. Overall, the treatment of the PVA solutions with acetic anhydride improved the properties of the electrospun mats.
