Shawn Schroeder 4.18 - 4.27, 5.0 My name is Shawn Schroeder. I have been creating games and other things for the past two decades. I am well versed in game and level design, as well as 3D modeling and animation. My programming skills are very rusty. I completed the Crazy Baby Sketch. Version 12.03 Win 7, converted to 3D. Baby's body was originally based on a 3D model that I created for my simple desert island survival "the end of humanity as we know it" game. I actually abandoned the drawing and posted it on deviantart under my username: schroeder. There are some cool drawings and comics there. James Bryant United States I was an amateur 3D artist and software engineer who landed a job at a cutting-edge 3D game engine company called Source. I did nothing but my job for years; I went from learning the 3D game development process from the ground up to designing a first-person ghost-in-the-wall scare center for the first level of their new horror game development package. John Ehr United States Discovery, Minnesota I have not worked with her in a long time, and she is a really good artist. She is familiar with 3D, making models of characters, and creating animations. There are a few things that she needs done for her next project, but she always sends me the next work she does, and I have to look at her stuff. I ask her what she wants me to do, and she always says, 'just show me what you think.' Heather Serrato United States My name is Heather Serrato, and I am a 3D and 2D artist. My artistic talent has been developed over several years and I have worked in my field in a variety of 3D and 2D software and mediums, such as Flash, Adobe After Effects, Macromedia Director, Animation Box, and Maya. I have also been lucky enough to have worked at several media companies and even made my own company, Toolbox Media, that has been in the forefront of the gaming animation industry. I am up-to-date on all the latest software technologies, and I am very excited to take on new tasks and projects. My goals are to see work through and achieve high quality artwork, both digitally and traditionally. Most of my work is for adult and mature games, that I

I am using the MVC5/Universal Authentication model. One of the requirements is for users to provide an email address (email, not a username), to gain access. Currently my code looks like this: [EmailAddress(ErrorMessage = "Please enter a valid email")] [Display(Name = "Email")] [RegularExpression(@"^[+].*\w+@\w+([-.\w+]*)\.w+([-.\w+]*)", ErrorMessage = "Please enter a valid email")] public string Email { get; set; } It will raise an error if the email address is not valid. This is fine. However, when I check the email address in the database, I am only seeing valid emails. So, my question is, is it possible to make the attribute ensure that the email address in the database is valid? A: I see two options. First, you can modify the attribute to do exactly what you're asking, using the RegisterModelStateDescriptor class. This will modify the email attribute in the HTTP request based on the actual email provided. This will, of course, require an implementation of your own Attribute, as well as registering it in your app configuration. The second option is to store a 'Valid' boolean in the database, use the email field to validate, and use EF's 'not in' expression for this field. When this evaluates to true, or the user provided email does not match any entry in the database, it will fail validation. This will require writing a custom ValidationAttribute for EmailAttribute. The code for this looks a little clunky to me, but it appears you could actually do everything here. This service provides second hand car parts for your car from V5, V8, V10 and V12 engines.
